HOW TO PLAY

Eleven years ago, Celia Ward was declared dead and believed murdered. Daniel Mercer was convicted of killing her, her family held a funeral and a body was buried beneath her name.

The body was not Celia's.

New evidence proves that Celia survived, stole more than two million dollars and was responsible for the murder of the woman buried in her grave. Celia then disappeared beneath a new identity. The suspect register in this book contains 11,020 names. One of them is the name she uses now.

Your task is to find the killer's new identity.

HOW IT WORKS

You will be given 20 clues relating to Celia's current name, surname or printed suspect number. Nineteen of those clues are true. One clue is deliberately false.

The correct identity is the only suspect that satisfies all nineteen true clues and contradicts the single false clue. You should therefore eliminate a suspect only after that suspect contradicts two or more clues.

Work carefully through the complete set of clues. When every clue has been applied correctly, only one suspect should contradict exactly one clue. That suspect is the identity Celia Ward now uses.

Your investigative tool is the suspect register that fills this book.

THE SUSPECTS

Every numbered line in the register represents a separate suspect. Each entry contains:

- A printed suspect number
- A first name
- A surname

Unless a clue specifically refers to the surname, “the killer’s name” means the first name Celia Ward currently uses. References to the first letter, last letter or total number of letters also concern the first name unless the clue states otherwise.

Names may appear more than once. Two entries with the same first name, surname or complete name remain separate suspects because they have different printed numbers.

HOW TO READ THE REGISTER

Read each register page in columns. Begin at the top of the first column and work downward before moving to the top of the next column.

Some clues concern the spelling of the killer’s first name or surname. Others concern the printed number beside the suspect. Apply each clue literally and use only the information printed in the book.

Previous eliminations never change the original spelling or numbering of the entries.

THE ONE FALSE CLUE

Exactly one of the 20 clues is false. The false clue is intentional. It is not an error and does not mean that the puzzle has multiple answers.

Keep track of how many clues each suspect contradicts:

- A suspect who contradicts two or more clues can be eliminated.
- After all 20 clues have been tested, a suspect who contradicts no clues cannot be the answer, because the correct identity must expose the false clue.
- The correct identity will contradict exactly one clue and satisfy the other nineteen.

You may test the clues in any order. Working from clue 1 through clue 20 is recommended, but the final result will be the same when every clue is applied correctly.

RULES FOR LETTERS AND NAMES

The vowels are A, E, I, O and U. The letter Y is always treated as a consonant. Ignore capitalisation when comparing or counting letters. Repeated letters are counted each time they appear unless a clue asks for the number of distinct letters or distinct vowels.

When letters are given numerical values, use their positions in the alphabet:

A = 1, B = 2, C = 3 ... Z = 26.

Spaces, hyphens, apostrophes and other punctuation marks are not letters and should not be included in letter totals.

WORKED EXAMPLE

Suppose the register contained only the following three suspects:

- 101 Lena Hart
- 102 Owen Price
- 103 Mara Hall

Now suppose there were three clues, exactly one of which was false:

1. The name contains the letter A.
2. The surname has exactly five letters.
3. The printed number contains the digit 2.

Lena satisfies clue 1. However, Hart has four letters and her printed number does not contain the digit 2. She contradicts two clues and can therefore be eliminated.

Owen contradicts clue 1, but Price has five letters and his printed number is 102. He contradicts exactly one clue and remains under consideration.

Mara satisfies clue 1, but Hall has four letters and her printed number does not contain the digit 2. Like Lena, she contradicts two clues and can be eliminated.

Owen is the only suspect who contradicts exactly one clue. He is therefore the answer, and clue 1 is the deliberate lie.

Use the same method with the complete suspect register. Test every surviving identity against all 20 clues and retain the one that fails exactly one.

A FAIR INVESTIGATION

Apart from the single deliberate lie, every clue is fair, literal and complete. There are no additional red herrings, no facts that require outside research and no answers that depend upon guessing part of the story.

The narrative explains Celia's crime, but it does not reveal her new identity. That identity can be found only by applying the clues to the suspect register. When the clues are applied correctly, they will always lead to the same answer.

Any photographs, documents or illustrations included in the case file are provided for atmosphere only and are not required to solve the puzzle unless explicitly stated otherwise.

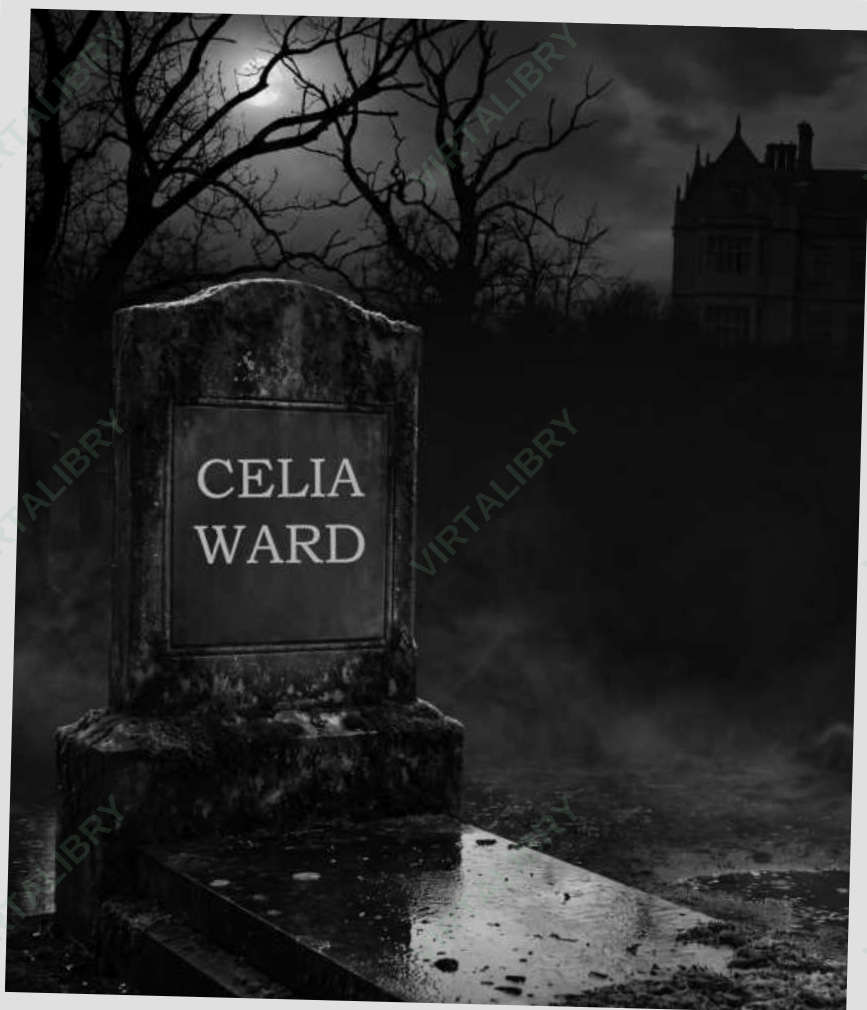

YOU ARE READY

The grave bearing Celia Ward's name has been opened. The original murder conviction has collapsed, and the woman who arranged for someone else to be buried in her place has been hiding for eleven years.

Celia Ward is the killer.

Her new name is already in this book.

The reopened investigation begins on the next page.

THE FIRE AT ASHCROFT HALL

At 11:42 p.m. on 17 October, eleven years ago, emergency services received a report of a fire at Ashcroft Hall, the administrative headquarters of the Ward Foundation. The blaze was confined to a private records room adjoining the office of the foundation's director, Celia Ward.

Firefighters brought the fire under control within twenty minutes and discovered the remains of an adult woman inside. Investigators determined that a solvent taken from the building's restoration workshop had been used as an accelerant. A post-mortem examination established that the victim had suffered a fatal fracture at the base of the skull before the fire began.

Celia's handbag, jewellery, office keys and identification documents were recovered beside the body. The victim's approximate age and physical measurements were consistent with Celia's, while dental charts supplied by her private clinic appeared to confirm the identification. Members of staff also stated that Celia had planned to work alone in the records room that evening.

Within forty-eight hours, the remains were formally identified as those of Celia Ward. The investigation became a murder inquiry.

THE MAN CONVICTED

Detectives arrested Daniel Mercer four days after the fire. Mercer had served as the Ward Foundation's financial adviser for nearly nine years and possessed unrestricted access to Ashcroft Hall, its accounts and the workshop where the solvent was stored.

The investigation revealed that more than two million dollars had been diverted from foundation accounts through fictitious suppliers. Celia had reportedly discovered the irregularities several weeks before her death and arranged to meet Mercer on the night of the fire. An unfinished memorandum recovered from her office indicated that she intended to report the missing money to the foundation's board the following morning.

Mercer initially denied visiting Ashcroft Hall. Security records later showed that his access card had opened a side entrance at 10:16 p.m., and a cleaner remembered seeing him near Celia's office. Investigators also detected traces of the solvent used in the fire inside the boot of his car.

The prosecution argued that Mercer had killed Celia to prevent her from exposing the theft. He possessed a financial motive, access to the building and an apparent connection to the accelerant. The evidence appeared to leave little room for another explanation.

MERCER'S LAST CLAIM

Mercer eventually admitted meeting Celia but denied killing her. He claimed that she had summoned him to Ashcroft Hall and warned him that she intended to "disappear before morning".

According to Mercer, Celia had discovered that someone was using his credentials to move money through false accounts. She promised to provide evidence but failed to appear at their agreed meeting place. Mercer said that he entered the records room, found the fire already burning and fled because he believed he had been framed.

Investigators found no evidence supporting his account. Mercer's failure to report the fire, his earlier denial and the solvent in his car severely damaged his credibility.

He was convicted of Celia Ward's murder and sentenced to life imprisonment. Mercer died in custody six years later without withdrawing his claim that Celia had planned her own disappearance.

THE CASE IS CLOSED

The remains recovered from Ashcroft Hall were released to the Ward family and buried beneath Celia's name in Bellweather Cemetery. The Ward Foundation ceased operating, Ashcroft Hall was sold and the missing two million dollars was never recovered.

The investigation was officially closed. Celia Ward was remembered as the victim, while Daniel Mercer remained the man convicted of killing her.

For eleven years, no one questioned the name engraved on the grave.

THE GRAVE IS OPENED

The case was reopened during a regional review of fire-damaged and historically misidentified remains. A forensic technician examining the original evidence noticed that Celia's identification had depended heavily on possessions found beside the body and dental charts supplied by a private clinic.

The clinic had closed shortly after the murder, and its original patient files could not be located. Several dates on the submitted charts appeared to have been altered, two identification numbers belonged to other patients and the dentist whose signature appeared on the final report denied preparing it.

A DNA profile was recovered from a preserved section of bone and compared with samples provided by Celia's surviving relatives. The results excluded any biological relationship between them and the woman buried in Bellweather Cemetery.

The body in Celia Ward's grave was not Celia Ward.

THE WOMAN BENEATH CELIA'S NAME

The recovered DNA produced a familial match in a missing-person database. The dead woman was identified as Mara Ellis, a twenty-nine-year-old records clerk employed by the Ward Foundation.

Mara had worked at the foundation for four years and was responsible for archiving contracts, supplier invoices and account authorisations. Several days before the fire, she told her sister that she had discovered something in the financial records that “was never meant to be found”.

Mara disappeared on the night of the fire. Her landlord reported her missing three days later, but the report was never connected to the murder investigation. Employment records supplied by the foundation indicated that Mara had resigned several months earlier and moved abroad.

Those records were false. Archived payroll data showed that Mara continued receiving wages until the week of the fire, and border authorities found no evidence that she had left the country.

Investigators also recovered Mara's supposed resignation letter. Its digital timestamp showed that it had been created on Celia's office computer at 9:26 p.m. on the night of the fire—after Mara entered the private records room and stopped responding to calls.

Someone had begun removing Mara Ellis from the foundation's records on the same night her body was placed beside Celia Ward's possessions.

TWO MILLION DOLLARS MISSING

Investigators returned to the transactions Daniel Mercer had been accused of authorising. Restored server records revealed that several transfers had been approved using Celia's personal security credentials while Mercer was outside the country.

Three weeks before the fire, the missing funds began moving through companies with no employees, offices or legitimate business activity. Six months after Celia's supposed death, part of the money was used by one of those companies to purchase a property on the opposite side of the country.

The company's true owner was concealed, and the signature on its formation documents was illegible. The property was later sold, with the proceeds divided among additional accounts. Each transaction led to another company, another address and another incomplete record.

The trail did not reveal a name, but it proved that whoever controlled the money had continued operating after Celia's funeral.

CELIA WARD IS ALIVE

Investigators recovered security footage from a storage facility rented by one of the companies. The footage had been recorded six months after the Ashcroft Hall fire and showed a woman whose age, height and physical proportions were consistent with Celia's.

Documents submitted to rent the storage unit were completed by hand. Independent examiners compared the writing with Celia's personal correspondence and concluded that both sets of documents had been written by the same person.

Investigators also recovered a brief telephone recording made during the rental process. Voice comparison could not produce a formal identification because of the recording's poor quality, but the speaker's accent, vocal range and speech patterns were consistent with Celia's archived interviews.

Taken together, the evidence established that Celia Ward survived the fire. She abandoned her name, caused Mara Ellis to be buried in her place and continued controlling the missing money after her supposed death.

CELIA WARD KILLED MARA ELLIS

Proof that Celia survived forced investigators to reconstruct the night of the fire from the beginning. Restored access records showed that Mara entered the private records room shortly after eight o'clock. Celia's personal security code was used nine minutes later. No other authorised entry was recorded before the building's alarm system was disabled.

A draft message recovered from Mara's damaged telephone explained why she had gone there. Addressed to her sister but never sent, it stated that Mara had traced the missing money to transactions authorised through Celia's private credentials. She intended to confront Celia that evening and report her findings to the foundation's trustees the following morning.

A renewed toxicological examination detected a powerful sedative in Mara's preserved tissue. Investigators traced the substance to a medical supply order approved through Celia's office shortly before the fire. The sedative would have left Mara conscious but unable to defend herself. A subsequent blow to the base of her skull caused the fatal injury recorded during the original post-mortem.

Digital examination of Celia's office computer revealed that the altered dental charts had been prepared several days before the fire. Mara's false resignation letter was created later, on the night she was killed. Celia had therefore arranged the false identification in advance and completed the removal of Mara from the foundation's records after the murder.

The case against Daniel Mercer had also been manufactured. Celia created accounting records that made the missing money appear connected to his authorisations, summoned him to Ashcroft Hall under the pretence of discussing the transactions and planted traces of the accelerant in his car. His genuine access-card entry proved that he had visited the building, while his decision to conceal the meeting during his first interview made the remaining evidence appear stronger than it was.

The reopened investigation reached an unavoidable conclusion: Celia Ward murdered Mara Ellis, disguised Mara's body as her own and deliberately arranged for Daniel Mercer to take the blame.

THE WOMAN SHE BECAME

Celia prepared her disappearance carefully. Her original documents stopped being used on the night of the fire, and none of the surviving financial records directly disclosed the identity she adopted. The companies connected to the stolen money were registered through intermediaries, temporary addresses and incomplete applications.

Investigators combined archived identity registrations, mailing records and information associated with the financial trail. That search produced a register containing 11,020 possible identities. One of those identities belongs to Celia Ward.

Her current name cannot be recovered directly from the surviving documents. However, 20 clues have been assembled to identify it. Nineteen clues accurately describe Celia's present first name, surname or printed number in the register. One clue is deliberately false.

Celia is the killer. Your task is not to determine who murdered Mara Ellis. Your task is to discover the name her murderer uses now.

FIND THE KILLER

Examine the 20 clues and apply them to the suspect register. Unless a clue specifically refers to the surname, “the killer’s name” means the first name Celia Ward currently uses. References to the killer’s printed number mean the number printed beside that identity in the register.

Eliminate every suspect who contradicts two or more clues. Celia’s current identity is the only entry that satisfies nineteen clues and contradicts exactly one.

A complete solution must identify:

- Celia’s current first and last name
- Her printed suspect number
- Her register page and position
- The deliberately false clue

Inspector Nakamura closes the original case file and places the suspect register on the desk. “For eleven years, Celia Ward has lived under a new identity of her own construction. The name she chose is somewhere in these pages. Find it.”

*The woman who killed her

THE INVESTIGATION

Mara Ellis's unsent message remained open on Inspector Nakamura's desk. She had expected to leave Ashcroft Hall with proof of Celia's theft. Instead, Celia had taken her life, erased her from the foundation's records and abandoned her own identity. Nakamura looked at the thousands of names still waiting to be examined. Somewhere among them was the new identity Celia had created for herself.

THE INVESTIGATION

Daniel Mercer's final statement had survived longer than he had: Celia Ward was alive, and she had arranged everything. No one believed him while belief might still have saved him. Inspector Nakamura returned the statement to its envelope and crossed another group of names from the register. Clearing Mercer was no longer enough. The woman who condemned him still had to be found.

THE INVESTIGATION

The storage-facility recording lasted only seventeen seconds. A woman entered beneath the camera, signed a document and reached towards a shelf without lifting her left arm above her shoulder. Inspector Nakamura had watched the movement until it no longer resembled coincidence. The footage proved that Celia had survived, but the name written on the rental form led only to another company and another abandoned address.

THE INVESTIGATION

Celia had not merely chosen a new name; she had constructed a life around it. Every account, address and signature had been placed between her and Ashcroft Hall like another locked door. Inspector Nakamura studied the narrowing register. The doors were beginning to close. Celia's mistake was believing that a false identity could survive every true detail.

THE INVESTIGATION

An application for an arrest warrant waited beside the suspect register. The account of the crime was complete: Mara Ellis murdered, Daniel Mercer framed and more than two million dollars stolen. Only the line marked CURRENT IDENTITY remained empty. Inspector Nakamura set down the file. Celia Ward had escaped beneath a carefully constructed identity. She would be found beneath it too.

EPILOGUE

Morning reached the windows as Inspector Nakamura completed the final review. Eleven years of false records, temporary addresses and manufactured evidence had been reduced to a single surviving identity. Mara Ellis's true name had finally been restored to the case, and Daniel Mercer's conviction could no longer conceal what Celia had done.

The inspector opened the waiting warrant and filled in the empty line.

If your investigation is correct, the name you found is the same one written there.

THE SOLUTION

Morning reached the windows as Inspector Nakamura completed the final review. Eleven years of false records, temporary addresses and manufactured evidence had been reduced to a single surviving identity.

Only one suspect satisfied nineteen clues and contradicted exactly one.

Mara Ellis had discovered Celia Ward's theft and intended to expose her. Celia killed Mara, framed Daniel Mercer and disappeared beneath a new name.

Ira Collins: The killer is suspect number 2,235, on register page 30 of 145. She appears on printed book page 43 as the 31st entry in the first column. The deliberately false clue was clue 2: "Celia's current first name contains the letter W." Every other clue was true.

A NOTE FROM THE AUTHOR

You've made it to the end! I hope the clues tested your powers of deduction, kept you guessing and made the moment when only one name remained especially satisfying.

If you enjoyed the experience, I would be incredibly grateful if you left an honest review on Amazon. It does not need to be long—a sentence or two about your experience is more than enough. Every review helps new puzzle solvers discover the book and gives independent authors and small publishers like me the opportunity to create more original mysteries.

Thank you again for reading, investigating and following the evidence all the way to the truth. I hope this will not be the last case we solve together.

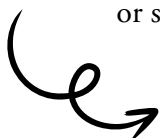

Until the next mystery,

Lora Lox
